COMMENTARY

Market Review

- The Japan small cap market stood its ground in February thanks to relatively static global equity markets. Following the strong October-December results, earnings revisions improved.
- By sector, exporters such as auto and electronics generally softened after the surge in December to early January. Domestic players, such as retail and real estate, gained slightly. By style, growth and larger cap stocks tumbled.

Fund Activity & Outlook

- Stock selection in materials and industrials had a negative impact on Fund performance during February, due mostly to poor earnings progress. We trimmed stocks with deteriorating earnings prospects in FY10.

- The Fund made some switches during the month as we trimmed expensive stocks and added those with improving earnings growth prospects in FY10 at cheap valuations such as Moshi Moshi Hotline.
- The economy is recovering, but the month-on-month figures are becoming more mixed. Earnings revisions seem generally improving for both FY09 and FY10, however, the divergence is widening between sectors as well as stocks. In such a market environment, we will continue to search for mispricing opportunities at the individual stock level through our bottom-up stock picking process.
