COMMENTARY

Market Review

- Emerging markets rose sharply in the first half of the month, but gave back most of those gains in the last week of the month as the liquidity fuelled rally was dampened by fears that the US Federal Reserve was getting closer to a reversal in its accommodative monetary policy.
- A number of emerging market currencies, including the Colombian peso and the South African rand, reversed their gains in the second half of October as it became clear that the local policymakers were planning ways to use increased regulations to prevent further currency appreciation amid fears too strong a domestic currency could dampen the economic recovery.

- We maintain an overweight in Brazil, Columbia, and South Africa.

Outlook

- The inflows into emerging markets are continuing at a remarkable pace. Combined with the weaker US dollar, emerging market currencies are likely to remain strong in spite of efforts by emerging market policymakers to try and stem further currency appreciation.

Fund Activity

- The Fund shifted from a defensive to a more pro risk stance taking the view that flows will continue to move into the asset class.
