COMMENTARY

Market Review

- Global bond yields were broadly static during February. The symbolic effect of a US discount rate hike by the US Federal Reserve was countered by lower than expected US CPI.
- In FX, the EUR underperformed both the US dollar and Japanese yen as investors remained concerned with peripheral member states financing positions, typified by Greece.
- Within the euro zone, Greek government bond spreads continued to be volatile as the form of an aid package to Greece remained uncertain.

Fund Activity & Outlook

- We kept a bias to overweight duration in light of positive carry which was of benefit to the Fund.

- We also increased our underweight exposure of the EUR vs. Canadian dollar and UK sterling. A strong fundamentals picture favours the Canadian dollar, while from a valuation perspective we prefer the GBP. We kept underweight Japanese yen and overweight Norway krona positions.
- Our allocation to high quality corporate credits saw minor spread widening which acted as a drag on total Fund performance.
- Expectations regarding monetary policy moves by the major central banks are likely to increase price volatility, especially in shorter maturity bonds, supporting a low risk overall duration strategy.
- Corporate credit spreads are back to fair value and while returns from further spread tightening have diminished, the additional yield remains attractive.
